The city of Hinesville celebrated Martin Luther King Jr. Day with a parade through the downtown area and a ceremony held at Bradwell Institute Monday.

Many different groups took part in the parade, including 3rd Infantry Division Soldiers and band, as well as various area churches.

Marie Alexis runs a home daycare service and decided to bring all eight of her charges to enjoy the festivities.

"I didn't want the children to just hear about Dr.

King," she said. "I wanted them to see first-hand what his life means to us today."

Col. Thomas James, 4th Brigade Combat Team Commander, said the Army is one manifestation of King's dream becoming a reality.

"His life made an everlasting imprint on our country and we see the benefits of his work in the military every day," James said. "Soldiers of many ethnic backgrounds unite together to fight threats to freedom at home and abroad. Treating every Soldier with dignity and respect is ingrained in all that we do."

Timothy Dixon attended the parade to pay his respects to King's ideals. "This is a time when people can come together united to celebrate with no restrictions on race, color or religion."

"It shows what a man with a dream and a vision can accomplish," Dixon remarked.

Cheerleaders, children send support to Stewart Soldiers

Melissa Martinez (top left), a Miami Dolphins cheerleader who attended Marne Week Nov. 20-22, is an elementary school teacher at Wilton Manors Elementary School, Fort Lauderdale, Fla. She was so inspired by the Soldiers of the 3rd Infantry Division she had her first grade class write "Dear Soldiers" letters. Those letters will be featured in upcoming editions of the Frontline.

Meditation removes distractions, strengthens souls

CHAPLAIN'S CORNER

Chap. (Capt.) Lee Harms
4/64 Armor Bn.

Throughout history, men and women have drawn strength from stepping away from the crowd to quietly commune with their Maker.

Isaac of old "went out to meditate in the field at the eventide," as did David and Jesus and so many others in the scriptures (see Genesis 24:63, Psalms 143:5 and Matthew 14:23).

In more recent history, the story is told of Gen. Charles Gordon, who, during a wartime campaign in Africa, began each day in private meditation.

Every morning while he pondered and prayed, a white handkerchief lay outside his tent door, signaling to his troops that he was not to be disturbed.

No matter the emergency, Gen. Gordon knew he could better meet the challenges of the day if he took time to meditate.

Some may think meditation is a waste of time. Perhaps they're too busy or too tired or too set in their ways.

It may not be easy to justify a time for sitting still and thinking deeply, but as suggested in Proverbs, there is wisdom in pondering "the path of thy feet."

Rather than aimlessly hurrying through life, stop to consider where you've been and where you want to be.

Stop to ask yourself questions that don't have ready answers.

Pause to consider why you feel the way you do.

Something about closing ourselves off from worldly distractions and really pondering gives us some perspective and helps us feel better about life.

When we look heavenward for guidance, our problems become less troublesome, our worries less taxing, and our heartaches less overwhelming.

The more sincerely we meditate, the more inner strength we receive.

Our convictions deepen, our lives become more purposeful, and our love is more abiding when we take time to meditate.

Internet radio show keeps Army wives tuned in to each other

Gerry J. Gilmore
American Forces Press Service

Two Army wives in Hinesville have joined forces to run an Internet radio show that provides important information to other military wives.

Star Henderson and Tara Crooks have more than 20 years' experience between them, and the two have teamed up to help other military wives through their Internet talk radio show, ArmyWifeTalkRadio.com.

"We want to pass that experience along to other Army wives," said Henderson, 32, whose husband, David, is a captain in the Georgia Army National Guard. The Hendersons have a 10-year-old son and 2-year-old daughter.

ArmyWifeTalkRadio.com covers a variety of topics, such as how to solve family challenges when a spouse is deployed and navigate the military's healthcare system. The program has developed a core following of fans, said Crooks, 31, a veteran with 10 years of military experience. Crooks' husband, Kevin, is an Army captain assigned to the 3rd Infantry Division at Fort Stewart. The Crooks have a 5-year-old daughter.

"It became like a community thing, where I've got loyal listeners that are probably following my life, wondering what the heck is going to happen in the Crooks' household today," Crooks said. "And, then I've got people calling in and sharing their stories. It makes me feel that I'm not alone."

There are so many services available to help military families, Crooks said there's no cohesive program to promote them to family members. That's where the radio show can really help, she said.

Henderson launched the show a year-and-a-half ago, and Crooks got involved about seven months ago when she began writing for the show's newsletter. Now they share responsibilities equally in the program.

A recorded show is made available on the site each Monday, but Henderson said they hope to be able to broadcast live in the near future.

In addition to sharing their personal experiences, the pair also interviews experts to provide advice on and get information about different subjects.

About seven months ago, they interviewed Allison Barber, deputy assistant secretary of defense for internal communications and public liaison, for the show. Their radio show is preparing to become a sponsor of the Defense Department's America Supports You program.

"I think it's an amazing program," Crooks said of the ASY program. "Just to see all those organizations coming together to support military members and their families is wonderful."

ASY highlights support from individuals, non-profit organizations and corporations for U.S. military men and women. ASY, Operation Homefront and Wal-Mart joined forces to sponsor Operation Christmas here and at five other locations across the country to bring cheer to military families.

Crooks and Henderson attended the recent Operation Christmas event for military families here.

During the event, they discussed their shows and shared some of their views on military family life.

Juggling husbands and children and military life can be challenging, the women said, but military wives are a strong lot who instinctively bond together to help one another, discuss pressing issues and propose solutions.

Crooks' husband said the radio show is "absolutely great," and his wife is eminently qualified to help other military wives.

"She is definitely the 'rock,'" Crooks said. "She holds together the family when I am gone (on deployment); she pays the bills.

It's really unbelievable what she puts in."

Black History Month essay and public speaking contest 2007 begins

Georgia Historical Society
Press Release

The Georgia Historical Society is pleased to announce that its 2007 Black History Month Essay and Public Speaking Contest is being incorporated into the Annual GHS's Georgia Days celebration.

Students in grades nine through 12 in local public or private schools are encouraged to submit an essay on the topic, "African-Americans and the U.S. Constitution: A Mixed History."

The deadline is 5 p.m. Friday, at the Georgia Historical Society.

First Prize is a cash award of $1,000; second prize is a cash award of $250; and third prize is a cash award of $100.

Essays will be judged by a panel of qualified judges from the Georgia Historical Society, Savannah State and Armstrong Atlantic State Universities, the Savannah College of Art and Design, and the Savannah-Chatham County Public Schools.

The top five essay writers will be invited to present their essays at a public reception at the Georgia Historical Society Feb. 11, where the three winners will be selected by a second panel of judges.

Students are encouraged to use the scholarly resources at their disposal in Savannah as they research their essays.

The Georgia Historical Society has an extensive collection of materials related to African-American history, including manuscripts and books, visual materials and other artifacts, and news clippings files.

Reference librarians are prepared to assist students with their research.

Other materials can be found at Savannah's public libraries and in the libraries of Savannah State and Armstrong Atlantic State Universities.

Students are also encouraged to visit Savannah's sites of African-American interest, including the Ralph Mark Gilbert Civil Rights Museum and the Beach Institute, among others.

Complete details and registration materials are available by following the education link at the Georgia Historical Society website (www.georgiahistory.com).

Interested students and teachers may also call GHS at (912) 651-2125, ext. 17 for more information or to request additional entry forms.
